Mr. Siddharth Ranade, Partner at Trilegal (Batch 2010)

Remembering 5 years of college brings a broad smile. The time spent at PGCL was truly transformative for me. The college offered opportunity, encouragement and the right environment to learn, explore and challenge yourself intellectually. I will always be grateful to the professors and lecturers who ignited in me the love of learning and the spirit of enquiry. My professional journey post my college days wouldn't be possible without these experiences and the upbringing at PGCL. What I am today is in sizeable measure a result of my time spent here. I shall always remain indebted and grateful!

Ms. Kritika Kapoor, Senior Director Legal at Jiostar (Batch 2012)

Choosing Pravin Gandhi College of Law was the best decision I made, and I say that with the benefit of hindsight. What sets the college apart is that learning is never confined to the classroom. There is a genuine effort to explore different ways of teaching, and students are actively encouraged to participate in moots, competitions and even sports events. That mix mattered more than I realized at the time — it shaped me as a person, not just as a law student. The faculty deserve a special mention. They are closely involved in each student's progress and take a real interest in how you are doing, which is rare and something I remain grateful for. Combined with an environment that is genuinely warm and encouraging, it made the five years both enjoyable and formative. PGCL set the base for my professional career, and everything I have built since stands on that foundation.

Mr. ZAIN MUKHI, Counsel at Bombay High Court (Batch 2012)

It says a lot about an institution when, even 14 years after graduating, a student feels the same affection and connection to it as I do. I believe that PGCL's two greatest strengths are its culture and people. Its faculty and staff have fostered a sense of belonging among all its students, both past and present. These values have created a thriving community of alumni, faculty, and students who are in constant conversation with each other. I owe much of my professional achievements to PGCL and my professors, and its recent change in status is well deserved. It reflects the consistent commitment of everyone associated with it to higher academic standards, professional success, and erudite scholarship. My heartiest congratulations to the principal, faculty, and staff of PGCL on this stellar achievement.

The faculty members deserve immense appreciation for their dedication, guidance, and continuous efforts to shape students into confident and competent legal professionals. Aditya Bharat Manubarwala, Counsel at Supreme Court of India (Batch 2018)

My years at Pravin Gandhi College of Law laid the foundation for everything I have gone on to achieve — from clerking at the Supreme Court of India to pursuing my LL.M at Cambridge as a Nehru Scholar. The rigour instilled by my professors, particularly in Constitutional Law, Arbitration, and Interpretation of Statutes, gave me the analytical grounding I rely on every day arguing before the Supreme Court and High Courts. PGCL didn't just teach me the law; it taught me how to think like a lawyer, and that distinction has shaped my entire career. The college's culture of mentorship and its faculty's genuine investment in student growth remain unmatched, and I carry those lessons into my own chambers today. This A+ NAAC rating and newly earned autonomous status are a fitting recognition of an institution that has always aimed higher, and I'm proud to call it my alma mater.

Nishaan Shetty, Associate at Shipping Disputes team at Fichte & Co. (Dubai) (Batch 2017)

Five years of law school can be a transformative period in any law student's life. The decisions you make during those years often shape the course of your entire life. This was certainly true of my time at SVKM's Pravin Gandhi College of Law. It gave me an important foundation for the career I have built since.

I remember that the faculty made sure our learning did not stop at textbooks. They made a genuine effort to give us as much practical exposure as possible. Skills sessions and guest lectures by eminent speakers helped us keep up with developments in law and legal education. They also broadened our outlook. It was through one such opportunity that I was introduced to Maritime Law—a niche field of law—which eventually became my area of specialisation.

Our Principal, Professor Duara, was at the centre of many of these opportunities. She always encouraged us and made sure we could participate in conferences and competitions and undertake valuable internships. This helped us grow in confidence and hold our own alongside students from other law schools. What stands out most is that her support did not end when I graduated. Even years later, she continues to offer her guidance and encouragement, for which I am grateful.
